Mr. and Mrs. William W. Wilmot Were Married 50 Years Ago To-day.

Mr. and Mrs. William Wallace Wilmot to-day reached the fiftieth anniverof their marriage. Several of their children were at the home yesterday to congratulate them and to present them $50 in gold. Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot came here eight years ago and bought the farm now owned by Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Carpenter; the Wilmots still living Emma Vannah, was born 65 years ago the night for that city, in Wardsboro, Me. They were married July 29, 1868, at Coaticook, Que. The greater part of their married life was resulted in his changing his occupation to farming. The Wilmots are members of the local Methodist parish. They have eight children living, as follows: Mrs. J. H. Cades of New York City, Mrs. Ernest M. Carpenter and Miss Winifred Wilmot of Bethel, William E. Wilmot of White River Junction, Charles R. Wilmot and Mrs. William V. Lawless of Springfield, Mass., Bernard L. Wilmot of Co. C, 504 engineer service battalion, Year. American expeditionary forces, and Durward C. Wilmot of Barre. "They Shall Not Pass."

The Spartan slogan of the French at Verdun is the animating shibboleth all along the allied line in front of the present German drive. Whatever may be said to the contrary, it is still too early to assume that the enemy has failed in his long-heralded offensive. He devoted unusual time and care to its preparation, and it is reasonable to suppose that he has-or had-plans of operation which have not as yet manifested themselves. those plans, whatever they may be, anticipated by the allied commanders, to whom his studied delay has afforded opportunity for considerable preparation on their own part; but those commanders would be the last men on earth to indulge in over-confidence at this stage of the operation, and it behooves us, likewise, to be mentally prepared for a period of vacillating fortunes ere the effectiveness or non-effectiveness of the drive can be finally judged; always remembering that true conservation of man-power forms no part of German military tactics, and that German assaults are launched with scant reference to the cost in German lives save those of the roy-

A few hours more, or a day or two at the outside, should make possible something like a definite estimate of the operation which the Germans have launched. Against the Mob Spirit.

President Wilson's indignation over he Praeger affair in Illinois does him lovely time.' Sometimes within the redit, though its ineffectiveness at this late date still satirizes the long leniency toward spies, informers, propagandists, backfire lighters, and general assistants of the enemy-some of them born and un-Americanized Germans, some German-Americans more German than American, some just plain traitors out for whatever tainted enemy money they can pick up. Robert Practer was the cictim, at Collinsville, Ill., of reprehensible mob spirit. What made the mob spirit? Largely the conviction on the part of simple country people in a re-gion where there had been a great deal of German talk and propaganda, that the government was doing nothing to put down this kind of work against the ountry and that it involved a great pubdanger. Praeger was lynched. Tried for the lynching, certain citizens of Colownsmen to such a degree that although he court instructed positively against them, the jury almost instantly acquitted them. A failure of justice—but one of those failures which indicate that there was something the matter with he prior enforcement of the law. The "mob spirit" is a matter of conern wherever it crops out. It should headed off by so firm an enforcement the law that it will never have a sance to grow up. But there are great ncitements to it in the law's delays in onnection with the enforcement of war recautions. It was the agents of the sipping board, and not the authorities of the department of justice, who lately in the nick of time, stopped from going o Scandinavian ports plans and speci fications which described minutely the American shipbuilding plans, our vessels under construction, the yard where hey are built, the ways, the plants, mine-sweepers, and much else the knowledge of which must have been of enormous value to the enemy in his sub marine campaign against our sea-help to our allies and our support of our solers abroad. All these plans were seized New York, where nobody minds. What if such a revelation of official inimpetence or delay had come to a head n an excitable small American communi ty, and had focussed itself on a single personality? It is time for indignation against such encouragement to the "mob pirit" as laxity of this kind engenders. It is in New York, too, that a Ger man subject is now, at last, arrested, who is accused of "working constantly as a German agent for months," in various places, stirring up opposition to the war among the colored people. He went about telling these people that the soldiers abroad, if captured by the Germans, would be put to death with torture, but that if they remained in war the kaiser would create a negro kingdom in this country "after he had won the war." It seems that this German's propaganda made little headway, The colored people were too intelligent and too patriotic to listen to it. Their work on French battlefields proves their ovalty. But the man went on with his oisonous work just the same. What would have happened to him, too, if his final apprehension had been in one of those excitable American communities instead of in New York City? Let us have the mob spirit reprobated These boys are giving so much. FLOUNDERING

By F. LANCASTER.

Copyright, 1818, Western Newspaper Union. A silence had fallen upon the chattering group. He fancied that in repose her face was beginning Receipts for June to have a wistful look and the fancy pleased him. But in an instant that subtle something which rings through Auditor's orders paid in our inmost life had flung out its danger Present indications are that he will find signals. Miss Lou started into consciousness.

"I understand that the mullet were so thick last night it was impossible to flounder in the gulf?" she said, catching mental outposts.

"Who wants to flounder in that gulf?" said the man from up the country, springing to a seat on the veranda and facing Miss Lou with a surprised expression.

"Why anyone who wishes to go loundering," replied Miss Lou, politely. "So, I should have imagined," he responded dryly. "They could not find a much better place to flounder in unless it was a 'Slough of Despond.' Do many indulge?"

"Oh, a lot of people." "What for?"

"For pleasure or profit; sometimes both! "Oh, you mean bathing!" "I suppose a good deal of bathing is

"That appears probable, especially if the gulf happened to have water in it." A surge of suppressed merriment swept over the group upon the gallery. Miss Lou adjusted her gold-rimmed glasses and looked with ominous quie-tude at the perplexed individual who had been asking questions. "Don't you know what a flounder is?" she asked severely.

"Certainly. It's an awkward effort made to escape from an uncomfortable situation."

"That may be true of the interior. On the coast, a flounder is a thin, flat fish that swims broadsides through the water and has both of its eyes on the same side. The method of capturing it by means of a spear is called 'floundering."

"Oh! And is it good sport?" "It is about as hard work as dancing and as big a bore as a theater." "If it is no worse than that I should like to try it. How is it done?"

"You dress yourself in clothes that you expect never to use again, take a spear and a basket, wade in with the COMMISSIONER OF INDUSTRIES. crowd and follow the torch bearer. Whenever you see a flounder's bed stick your spear into it. You will generally find that the flounder is not there when your spear is, but that doesn't matter. If you do not slip up and strangle yourself with salt water or get stung by a stingaree you may declare that you have had a 'perfectly next two weeks you will begin to get over It."

the incessant talker had dropped off the gallery and disappeared. "Hello, Hall!" cried the tall clergyman, looking up from his writing.

"Come in-glad to see you." "You should be. I'm a bearer of year ending June 30, 1918, is included good tidings." "Ah?" "Invitation to a floundering party."

"My dear boy, I never-" "No, of course not. But you are going this time, and so is Miss Lou."

"Miss Lou!" "Yes. It's a chance in ten thousand. Don't neglect it."

The floundering party was in full swing. The iron baskets filled with heaps of burning pine swayed on the ends of their long poles and threw fantastic effects over the drowsy waters, Behind the line of lights came the crescent of flounderers, the bolder spirits thigh-deep in water, the timid ones hugging the shore. Laughter, repartee and song made the night gay indeed. An occasional shrill scream or heavy splash only tended to heighten the merriment. Well in the rear came Miss Lou-using her spear as a staff and her basket as ballast. She paused frequently to adjust her glasses. The whole situation was distinctly dis-

"If ever I get-" a frightened flounder shot from beneath Miss Lou's sandaled feet, her spear flew out; her basket flew up, and the glasses, leaping from her nose, swung widely at the end of their chain. Miss Lou set her teeth hard on a scream and floundered valiantly, and her downfall would have been inevitable had not a strong arm caught and steadled her.

Ten miles away the red-eyed lighthouse on Cat island winked lazily at his brother in Ship Island harbor. The strong arm was still about her shoulders and somewhere in the night above her she could feel a pair of gray eyes upon her.

"This is a floundering party," she
